Mr. Meassey was born in Chester, Pennsylvania, on November 14, 1875. At the age of two, his family moved to Reading, Pennsylvania, where Mr. Meassey lived until 1881. After graduation from Rider's Park High School, he worked and traveled for several years in the United States. His interest in the field of psychology was sparked by his exposure to the work of Swiss psychologist Wilhelm Wundt while attending the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Meassey then moved to Philadelphia, where he worked in the law firm of Meassey & Meassey, and later, in the law firm of Meassey & Meassey. His interest in psychology continued to grow, and he eventually became a psychologist at the University of Pennsylvania.

In 1912, Mr. Meassey received his Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, where he was a student of William James, a former professor of psychology at Harvard University. He then began teaching at the University of Pennsylvania, where he continued his research in psychology.

Mr. Meassey's contributions to psychology were significant, and he was known for his work in the areas of psychology and education. He was also a prominent figure in the American Psychological Association, where he served as president in 1930.

Mr. Meassey's legacy continues to influence psychology today, and his work continues to be studied and discussed by psychologists around the world.
